■ T3 2023

En el tercer trimestre, la economía estadounidense registró buenos resultados, mientras que en la zona euro y China el clima siguió siendo decepcionante. En la mayoría de los países, la inflación continuó retrocediendo, aunque sigue siendo demasiado elevada en opinión de los bancos centrales. Los grandes bancos centrales de las economías avanzadas siguieron subiendo los tipos de interés de referencia, pero a un ritmo más lento que en trimestres anteriores. Sin embargo, algunos bancos centrales de economías emergentes empezaron a bajar sus tipos. En los mercados, los rendimientos de los bonos subieron y las acciones retrocedieron.

Estados Unidos

A pesar de la fuerte subida de los tipos de interés, la economía estadounidense se comportó mejor de lo previsto. Muchos observadores han rebajado o atenuado sus previsiones de recesión. Las causas de esta buena resistencia fueron, entre otros factores, el amplio ahorro de los hogares y las medidas públicas de apoyo a la inversión. Las revisiones de las cifras de agosto y septiembre confirmaron así que el crecimiento del PIB había mantenido su solidez en el segundo trimestre, con una tasa anualizada del 2.1%. Asimismo, los indicadores ISM de septiembre apuntaron a una sólida actividad en el sector servicios y una atenuación de la contracción en la industria. Se creó mucho empleo, aunque a un ritmo más lento, y la tasa de paro aumentó ligeramente (3.8% en agosto frente al 3.6% en junio). El índice general de inflación volvió a acelerarse (3.7% en agosto frente al 3.0% en junio), principalmente por la subida de los precios de los carburantes, pero el índice subyacente siguió desacelerándose hasta el 4.3% en agosto, frente al 4.8% de junio. La Reserva Federal subió los tipos de interés de los fondos federales 25 puntos básicos en julio (manteniendo su horquilla entre el 5.25 y el 5.50%), pero los mantuvo sin cambios en septiembre, dejando así la puerta abierta a posibles subidas adicionales.

Zona euro

La actividad económica ha sido decepcionante en la zona euro. Las cifras de crecimiento del T2 prácticamente se estancaron —aumento del PIB del 0.1%— tras el estancamiento ya observado en el T1. Mientras que los países más expuestos a los servicios (Francia y España) mantuvieron un ritmo ligeramente positivo, aquellos en los que la industria tiene más peso registraron un crecimiento casi nulo (Alemania) o negativo (Italia). Las encuestas de actividad del T3 (especialmente los índices PMI) mostraron que el deterioro ya observado en la industria tendía a extenderse a los servicios. Aun así, a pesar de algunos indicios de ralentización, el mercado laboral mantuvo su solidez, con una tasa de desempleo del 6.4% en agosto, su nivel más bajo desde la creación de la zona euro. En conjunto, la inflación retrocedió. En septiembre, la subida de la tasa general a 12 meses volvió a situarse en el 4.3% (frente al 5.5% de junio), con el índice subyacente en el 4.5% (frente al 5.5%). El Banco Central Europeo subió sus tipos de referencia 25 pb en julio, y de nuevo en septiembre, situando el tipo de los depósitos en el 4.00%. Sin embargo, no llegó a indicar la probabilidad de nuevas subidas, reafirmando así su confianza en que el nivel actual de los tipos siga haciendo retroceder la inflación.

Mercados emergentes

Los datos del T3 procedentes de China siguen mostrando debilidad en el sector inmobiliario, así como en otros sectores, mientras que las promotoras inmobiliarias se enfrentan a dificultades en términos de endeudamiento. Sin embargo, los datos publicados en agosto superaron las expectativas, lo que sugiere que lo peor ya se ha registrado en el T3. Con todo, a pesar de las previsiones de una recuperación cíclica gradual, China está experimentando una desaceleración que dura ya varios años. El principal factor causante de esta desaceleración ha sido, y sigue siendo, el sector inmobiliario. Los poderes del Estado respondieron con una serie de medidas políticas, aunque no han sido suficientes para reactivar rápidamente el crecimiento. La prioridad sigue siendo una transición a largo plazo hacia un modelo de crecimiento menos dependiente de la vivienda y las exportaciones. En la mayoría de los países emergentes, el dinamismo macroeconómico sigue siendo débil, aunque orientado al alza. De hecho, las exportaciones parecen haber tocado fondo. Sin embargo, debido al debilitamiento de los efectos de base, la subida de los precios de los alimentos y la energía y la presión sobre las divisas, el proceso de descenso de la inflación se ralentizó y lastró el poder adquisitivo de los hogares. Aun así, los bancos centrales, al margen de algunos casos atípicos (Turquía, Rusia y Tailandia, por ejemplo) han iniciado y continuado la relajación monetaria bajando sus tipos. Pero son muchos los que han adoptado una perspectiva más prudente tras las declaraciones de la Fed y la posibilidad de que mantenga los tipos altos durante más tiempo. En otros acontecimientos significativos de este trimestre, los países BRICS abrieron la vía a la admisión de seis nuevos miembros (Argentina, Egipto, Irán, Etiopía, Arabia Saudí y Emiratos Árabes Unidos) y la India pasó a formar parte del índice EMGBI.

Renta variable

La renta variable pisó el freno en el T3. A pesar del buen comportamiento de los resultados empresariales, el tono adusto de los bancos centrales provocó una fuerte subida de los tipos a largo plazo, lo que a su vez desencadenó una corrección de los mercados bursátiles. El tipo estadounidense a 10 años subió casi 75 pb este trimestre. El MSCI World AC cayó un 2.9%. A escala regional, los resultados de Estados Unidos (-3.4%) fueron inferiores a los de Europa (-2.5%). En la zona euro (-4.6%), Italia (+0.6%) superó con creces a sus homólogos. El resto de los Estados miembros están en números rojos este trimestre, con Portugal (-6.1%) y los Países Bajos (-11.5%) a la cola. Fuera de la zona euro, el mercado británico avanzó un 1.3%. Suecia (-5.1%) y Suiza (-3.3%) cerraron el trimestre en terreno negativo. Japón (+0.8%) en moneda local sigue beneficiándose de la caída del yen, así como de la resistencia de su economía. Por último, el índice MSCI Emerging Markets se dejó un 2.2%, impulsado por los malos resultados del mercado chino, que retrocedió un 3%. A nivel sectorial en Europa, el sector de la energía encabeza las subidas (+14.1%), seguido del inmobiliario, que avanza un 7.9%, y del bancario, que sube un 4.1%. Los bienes de consumo cíclico y la tecnología de la información fueron los sectores que más cayeron este trimestre, con descensos del 11.5% y el 10.7%, respectivamente. Los denominados títulos de valor (+1.8%) superan a los de crecimiento (-6.5%).

Renta fija

El rendimiento de los bonos aumentó considerablemente en el T3. El rendimiento del bono alemán a 10 años subió más de 42 pb, hasta el 2.81%. El rendimiento del bono estadounidense a 10 años avanzó 76 pb, cerrando el trimestre en el 4.57%. Los rendimientos de los bonos están volviendo a niveles anteriores a la crisis financiera, señal del cambio de régimen macrofinanciero. La economía estadounidense sorprendió a los observadores por su resistencia. El crecimiento mantiene su solidez y aumenta la probabilidad de un aterrizaje suave. La Fed subió sus tipos de interés de referencia al 5.5%. Se espera que el ciclo de ajuste monetario llegue a su fin, pero Jerome Powell (presidente de la Reserva Federal) indicó que es probable que los tipos de referencia se mantengan altos durante un periodo prolongado. Por su parte, el BCE se enfrenta al dilema de la elevada inflación frente al rápido deterioro de las perspectivas de crecimiento en la zona euro. La institución ha elevado el tipo de interés de los depósitos al 4% y ahora se espera que también los mantenga sin cambios durante un periodo prolongado. La batalla para volver a situar la inflación en el objetivo del 2% será larga, lo que exigirá mantener una política monetaria restrictiva.

■ T4 2023

La actividad económica mostró solidez en el cuarto trimestre, aunque se desaceleró en Estados Unidos y fue decepcionante en la zona euro. El crecimiento en la mayoría de las economías emergentes se ralentizó, aunque sin perder pujanza. La inflación ha seguido cayendo en la mayoría de los países. La Reserva Federal estadounidense y el Banco Central Europeo indicaron que el ciclo de subidas de los tipos de referencia está tocando a su fin, mientras que varios bancos centrales de economías emergentes han bajado los suyos. En los mercados, los rendimientos de los bonos subieron y las acciones retrocedieron en octubre, pero esta tendencia se invirtió en noviembre y diciembre, de modo que a finales de año los rendimientos de los bonos eran inferiores a los de principios de trimestre, mientras que las acciones avanzaron claramente, y varios índices incluso alcanzaron máximos históricos.

Estados Unidos

Aunque la economía estadounidense siguió mostrando una sorprendente resistencia a la fuerte subida de los tipos de interés, la tendencia apuntaba, no obstante, a la desaceleración. Las cifras de crecimiento del T3 publicadas en el T4 mostraron una actividad muy sostenida (crecimiento del PIB del 4.9% en tasa anualizada según la revisión de diciembre). Sin embargo, las cifras más recientes del mercado laboral han puesto de manifiesto que podrían estar empezando a perder fuelle, de modo que, pese a que la creación de empleo sigue siendo abundante (cerca de 180,000 puestos de trabajo al mes de media en el T4), la tasa de paro se ha estabilizado en el 3.7% en diciembre, frente al 3.4% que registró en abril. Otras cifras mensuales, como las de ventas minoristas, pedidos de bienes duraderos y producción industrial, apuntan a que el crecimiento del T4 será probablemente mucho más débil que el del T3. Por otra parte, la inflación, aunque por encima del objetivo del 2% de la Fed, ha descendido claramente. En noviembre, el aumento en 12 meses del índice general de precios fue de tan solo el 3.1%, frente al 3.7% de agosto, con un índice subyacente en el 4.0%, frente al 4.3% anterior. La Reserva Federal no ha modificado sus tipos de interés de referencia tras la subida de julio. La institución indicó que estaba satisfecha con su nivel actual y que aún estaba debatiendo el ritmo de sus recortes en el futuro.

Zona euro

La actividad económica se ha mantenido especialmente anémica en la zona euro, y la subida de los tipos de interés se ha sumado a las dificultades específicas del sector industrial. A finales de noviembre, la revisión de las cifras del PIB del T3 mostró una muy leve caída del 0.1% para el conjunto de la región, con modestos descensos en Francia y Alemania, un aumento insignificante en Italia y un incremento ligeramente mayor en España. Esta erosión forma parte del cuasiestancamiento observado desde principios de año. Las cifras correspondientes al inicio del T4 no mostraron ninguna mejora notable. El mercado laboral, sin embargo, sigue en relativa buena forma, con una tasa de desempleo que se mantuvo en octubre en el 6.5%, la más baja desde la creación de la zona euro. Las buenas noticias provinieron del plano de la inflación, ya que el ritmo de subida del índice general de precios se ralentizó, situándose en diciembre en el 2.9% en 12 meses (tras el 4.4% de septiembre) y el índice subyacente retrocedió hasta el 3.4% (anteriormente era del 4.5%). El Banco Central Europeo no ha modificado sus tipos de interés de referencia tras la subida de septiembre. Tras la reunión de su comité de política monetaria en diciembre, volvió a afirmar que confiaba en que el nivel actual de los tipos permitiría seguir reduciendo la inflación, al tiempo que indicaba que cualquier debate sobre posibles recortes de tipos era prematuro.

Mercados emergentes

China siguió mostrándose prudente en el desarrollo de sus políticas económicas en el T4, en un contexto de recuperación muy desigual. El gasto público en infraestructuras se ha acelerado, pero el consumo se ha ralentizado y la inflación se ha situado en terreno negativo. En Brasil, el crecimiento de la inflación ha seguido ralentizándose, mientras que en la India el consumo fue más sólido que la inversión. En conjunto, en las economías emergentes, la demanda interna se ha frenado y la inflación ha seguido bajando, manteniéndose en la mayoría de los casos por debajo de las cifras de los bancos centrales. Los bancos centrales han seguido bajando sus tipos. El banco central brasileño siguió adelante con varios recortes de 50 pb, mientras que el banco central chileno aceleró su ritmo con recortes de 75 pb. Otros se sumaron a esta tendencia, por ejemplo los bancos centrales de Colombia y la República Checa. La postura aparentemente más restrictiva de la Reserva Federal estadounidense ha reducido la presión sobre los tipos de cambio, que antes había llevado al banco central indonesio a subir sus tipos y al chileno, a ralentizar sus recortes. Por último, en Argentina, el nuevo presidente Milei inició su mandato con una devaluación del peso del 50% y un ambicioso plan de liberalización de la economía.

Renta variable

Los mercados bursátiles cayeron en octubre, pero repuntaron con fuerza gracias a la bajada de los tipos a largo plazo. Durante el trimestre, el MSCI World AC avanzó un 9%. A escala regional, Estados Unidos (+11.5%) batió a Europa (+5.3%). Dentro de la zona euro (+7.5%), Países Bajos (+14.8%) y Portugal (+10.2%) superaron a sus vecinos. El resto de los Estados miembros están todos en verde, con Francia (+5.6%) y España (+6.7%) en cabeza. Fuera de la zona euro, destaca el mercado sueco (+12.2%), seguido del británico (+1.6%) y el suizo (+1.3%). Japón (+2.1%) en moneda local sigue beneficiándose de la caída del yen, así como de la resistencia de su economía. Por último, el índice MSCI Emerging Markets avanzó un 5.2%, pese a los malos resultados del mercado chino, que retrocedió un 5%. En el sector europeo, los títulos de valor (+3.4%) superaron a los de crecimiento (+7.2%). A la cabeza se situaron el sector inmobiliario (+22.6%) y las TI (+18.3%), sensibles a los tipos de interés. Los sectores de energía (-2.6%) y bienes de consumo básico fueron los únicos que cerraron el trimestre en terreno negativo.

Renta fija

Los mercados de tipos de interés se caracterizaron por una fuerte caída de los tipos en toda la curva. El tipo estadounidense a 10 años cerró el año rondando el 3.8% y el Bund alemán a 10 años, en torno al 2%. El mercado también espera que la Fed y el BCE inicien una ronda de recortes de tipos en marzo. Esta rápida reducción de los tipos se debe a: 1) un retroceso de la inflación mayor de lo previsto en las economías desarrolladas; 2) un cambio en el tono de la Fed, que ahora ha vuelto al punto en el que sus dos mandatos, inflación y empleo, son significativos. Tranquilizados por el descenso de la inflación, los miembros del FOMC están ahora muy atentos al impacto de la subida de tipos sobre el crecimiento, con el fin de evitar una ralentización excesiva de la actividad. Por ello, la Fed no quiere frenar la economía más de lo necesario; 3) un crecimiento económico que ha seguido sorprendiendo a la baja en la zona euro. Sin embargo, el mercado laboral de la región es muy boyante. Los mercados esperan ahora que la inflación regrese rápidamente al 2% sin recesión.

■ T1 2024

La actividad económica mantuvo su solidez en Estados Unidos en el T1 de 2024, menos en Europa, aunque mejoró ligeramente en comparación con el último trimestre de 2023. La tendencia también fue ligeramente mejor en las economías emergentes. La inflación siguió bajando, aunque gradualmente. Tanto la Reserva Federal estadounidense como el Banco Central Europeo (BCE) indicaron que esperarían un poco más antes de bajar sus tipos. En los mercados, los rendimientos de los bonos se recuperaron, mientras que la renta variable perpetuó su dinamismo de finales de 2023.

Estados Unidos

La economía estadounidense siguió demostrando una notable fortaleza, aunque muchos observadores esperaban que las subidas de tipos de 2022 y 2023 desembocaran en una recesión. A finales de marzo, una tercera estimación oficial del PIB del T4 de 2023 mostró un crecimiento del 3.4% en tasa anualizada. Pasando ahora a datos más recientes, las cifras del mercado laboral indicaron la creación de más de 500,000 puestos de trabajo netos en enero y febrero, lo que representa un ritmo elevado y al alza en comparación con el T4. Por su parte, los indicadores de clima empresarial del sector industrial apuntaron a una ralentización de su caída durante los dos primeros meses del trimestre, mientras que el sector servicios seguía mejorando. La inflación siguió bajando, aunque gradualmente. En febrero, el índice general de precios al consumo se situó en el 3.2% a 12 meses, tras el 3.4% de diciembre, y el índice subyacente se posicionó en el 3.8%, frente al 3.9% anterior. A principios del trimestre, el mensaje de la Reserva Federal trató de calmar las expectativas del mercado de un recorte de los tipos de referencia en el T1. Indicó que era muy probable que la próxima medida fuera una reducción, pero que solo se produciría cuando hubiera más indicios de una desaceleración persistente de la inflación.

Zona euro

Tras casi estancarse a lo largo de 2023, en el T1 surgieron algunos débiles signos de mejora. Las cifras del PIB del T4 reflejaron un crecimiento nulo. Fueron ligeramente negativas en Alemania, ligeramente positivas en Italia y Francia, y más positivas en España. Sin embargo, en marzo, los índices PMI subieron hasta un nivel que indicaba una expansión de la actividad en el sector servicios, con una contracción menos severa que a finales de 2023 en industria. Otros indicadores, como el índice IFO del clima empresarial alemán, también registraron una ligera mejora. Asimismo, el mercado laboral siguió resistiendo al pesimismo económico, ya que la tasa de desempleo se mantuvo en febrero en el 6.5%, su nivel más bajo desde la creación de la zona euro. La inflación siguió desacelerándose: el índice de precios al consumo a 12 meses cayó al 2.6% en febrero (desde el 2.9% de diciembre) y el índice subyacente retrocedió hasta el 3.1% desde el 3.4%. Al igual que la Fed estadounidense, el BCE ha tratado de disipar las expectativas de un rápido recorte de los tipos de interés de referencia. El mensaje de la reunión de su comité de política monetaria del 7 de marzo se interpretó ampliamente como una señal de una primera reducción en junio.

Mercados emergentes

El repunte económico en China fue moderado y persisten las presiones deflacionistas. Las autoridades chinas han preferido bajar los tipos de interés en lugar de utilizar armas presupuestarias para abordar la reducción de la deuda de las autoridades locales. Desde principios de año, el crecimiento ha mejorado en los países emergentes, aunque se ha mantenido en terreno negativo en Europa central y del Este. La inflación cayó bruscamente en la mayoría de los países en enero, pero en febrero surgieron algunas sorpresas al alza y preocupación por las expectativas. Las divisas de los países emergentes se mostraron extremadamente volátiles a la espera de una mayor visibilidad de la política monetaria estadounidense; la renta variable tampoco se libró. Los bancos centrales, que en su mayoría habían empezado a suavizar su política monetaria, reaccionaron de nuevo con rapidez aplazando los recortes de tipos en marzo y/o manteniéndolos sin cambios. Obviamente, el contexto geopolítico sigue lastrando la confianza de los inversores, especialmente preocupados por las posibles repercusiones en la inflación mundial.

Renta fija

Los tipos se mantienen altos y la volatilidad sigue siendo elevada. El rendimiento del Bund alemán a 10 años superó el 2.3% y el del bono estadounidense a 10 años, el 4.3%. Hay dos factores que siguen marcando el ritmo de los mercados: el avance de la inflación y lo que dicen los bancos centrales. Los mercados confían mucho en que el BCE baje tipos en junio. En su última reunión, el BCE dejó la puerta abierta a un recorte de tipos en junio. Sin embargo, Christine Lagarde ha reiterado su llamamiento a la paciencia en materia de política monetaria. El BCE mantiene la cautela sobre el ritmo de desinflación, especialmente en el sector servicios, y seguirá vigilando la evolución del mercado laboral, que ha mostrado una gran resistencia. Por otra parte, los mercados están menos seguros de que la Fed vaya a recortar tipos en junio. La institución no tiene prisa por mover ficha. Considera que es más probable que el crecimiento económico subyacente se recupere y sea más sólido que en diciembre. La retórica de la Reserva Federal no ha cambiado, a pesar de la reciente aceleración de la inflación. Mantiene la línea de que "la inflación está cayendo gradualmente en una senda —a veces accidentada— hacia el 2%".

Renta variable

Los activos de riesgo comenzaron el año en verde. Los inversores creyeron en la hipótesis del "aterrizaje suave", lo que provocó una revalorización de los mercados de renta variable. Además, los buenos resultados trimestrales de las empresas apuntalaron a los mercados de renta variable este trimestre. Como consecuencia, las acciones mundiales han salido beneficiadas: el MSCI ACWI ha avanzado un 9.1%. Estados Unidos se anotó un 10% y superó a Europa, que subió un 7.6%. Los mercados de la zona euro evolucionan mejor, con una subida del 9.9%, en la que destacan Países Bajos (+17.9%) e Italia (+15.7%). Fuera de la zona euro, el mercado británico está obteniendo peores resultados este trimestre, ya que solo se ha anotado un 2.9%. Siguiendo con los mercados desarrollados, el mercado japonés impresionó este trimestre, con una subida del 18.3%. El índice MSCI de mercados emergentes se revalorizó (+4.0%) impulsado por los mejores resultados del mercado taiwanés, que subió un 16.9%. En el sector europeo, los denominados títulos de valor (+10.4%) superaron a los defensivos (+2.9%). A la cabeza se situaron tecnología (+17.9%), bienes de consumo cíclico (+12.3%) y seguros (+11.9%). Los suministros públicos (-5.6%) y el sector inmobiliario (-1.4%) fueron los principales lastres este trimestre. En Europa, los títulos de crecimiento (+10.7%) superan a los de valor (+4.4%).

T2 2024

Las cifras económicas mostraron tendencias divergentes a ambos lados del Atlántico. En Estados Unidos, la actividad se está ralentizando ligeramente respecto a una dinámica anteriormente vigorosa y la inflación ha reanudado su tendencia a la baja. En la zona euro, el clima empresarial mejora tras varios trimestres difíciles y la inflación ha reaccionado modestamente tras varios meses de descenso. El BCE inició un primer recorte de tipos el 6 de junio, mientras que la Fed no hizo ninguna declaración precisa sobre la fecha de su primer movimiento. En los mercados, los bonos tuvieron un comportamiento negativo y siguen mostrándose volátiles, sobre todo en Europa, mientras que las acciones continúan subiendo.

Estados Unidos

Tras varios trimestres de buena resistencia, la economía estadounidense ha empezado a dar signos de debilidad en el segundo trimestre. Aunque las cifras estadounidenses siguieron siendo un testimonio de la potente actividad (el índice ISM manufacturero volvió a terreno positivo por primera vez desde noviembre de 2022 y las ventas minoristas subieron), los primeros indicios de debilidad llegaron con el crecimiento del PIB del T1, por debajo de las expectativas. Los indicadores estadounidenses publicados en mayo señalaron, en su mayoría, una moderada ralentización de la actividad: los índices ISM regresaron a una ligera contracción en industria. Esta tendencia se confirmó en junio. El mensaje fue diferente en servicios, donde las perspectivas mejoraron. El mercado laboral también fue contradictorio, con buenos avances en la creación de empleo, aunque la tasa de paro subió al 4%. Sin embargo, el deterioro de las perspectivas de consumo se confirmó con las decepcionantes ventas minoristas, que presagiaban un débil crecimiento en el T2.

La tendencia a la baja de la inflación pareció detenerse a principios del trimestre. Finalmente se validó con una inflación PCE (la medida preferida de la Reserva Federal) en una tasa anualizada del 2.6%. Sin embargo, las presiones inflacionistas se limitaron a los servicios. En este contexto, la Reserva Federal se abstuvo de anunciar un calendario de recortes de tipos, indicando que primero necesita más señales de desinflación. Los miembros de la Fed elevaron ligeramente sus previsiones de inflación para 2024 y modificaron la secuencia de recortes de los tipos de interés de referencia a lo largo del tiempo sin alterar el valor total de -250 pb para finales de 2026. A finales de junio, varios gobernadores de la Fed parecían reacios a apoyar recortes de tipos antes de finales de año.

Europa

La mejora de la situación económica europea fue la agradable sorpresa del segundo trimestre. Aunque siguen siendo débiles en términos absolutos, las cifras de la zona euro sorprendieron claramente al alza en abril respecto a unas expectativas muy pesimistas. Así, los principales indicadores de coyuntura (Sentix, ZEW y PMI) señalaron globalmente una ligera mejora de la actividad, a pesar de una situación que sigue erosionada en el sector manufacturero. Junio confirmó una ligera recuperación de las economías con notables signos de mejora, lo que augura una expansión moderada en el segundo trimestre.

Aunque la tendencia general de la inflación en la zona euro es a la baja, se resiste en las actividades de servicios, que son su principal motor. Las estadísticas de inflación de mayo indican un repunte hasta el 2.6% interanual, frente al 2.4% de abril, y un nuevo descenso hasta el 2.5% en junio en tasa anualizada. Esto se debe principalmente a la inflación de los servicios, que se espera que disminuya gradualmente. La tasa anual de inflación básica, que excluye los volátiles precios de alimentación y energía, alcanzó el 2.7% en abril y el 2.9% en junio, por encima de las expectativas del mercado. Entre las principales economías, la inflación (armonizada a escala de la UE) bajó en Alemania (2.5%), Francia (2.5%) y España (3.5%), mientras que subió en Italia (0.9%).

A pesar del contexto de volatilidad de la inflación y de reanudación de la actividad económica, el BCE redujo el 6 de junio sus tipos de referencia 25 pb por primera vez en casi cinco años al recortar el tipo de los depósitos hasta el 3.75% desde el 4%, en línea con las expectativas del mercado. Christine Lagarde, sin embargo, no hizo comentarios sobre futuras bajadas de tipos. La divergencia temporal entre la Fed y el BCE tuvo un efecto limitado sobre el euro, que cayó de 1.09 a 1.07 frente al dólar estadounidense.

Aunque la inflación ha vuelto a bajar al 2% en el Reino Unido, el Banco de Inglaterra mantuvo sus tipos en el 5.25% antes de las elecciones británicas del 4 de junio, lo que puso de manifiesto la incertidumbre sobre su evolución a corto plazo.

Asia

En Japón, los datos de inflación de mayo fueron inferiores a las expectativas de consenso y se han rebajado las estadísticas de crecimiento para el T1. La inflación (excluidos energía y productos frescos) se situó en el 2.1% interanual, por debajo de la previsión del 2.2%. El retorno de la inflación al objetivo del Banco de Japón (BoJ) fue ligeramente más rápido de lo previsto. El mercado anticipa lógicamente que el Banco de Japón mantendrá sus tipos de interés a corto plazo, lo que provocará una nueva caída del yen (el par USD/JPY superó los 160 al final del trimestre).

China sigue sumida en un mercado inmobiliario que no logra estabilizarse, con un descenso continuado de volúmenes y precios. Las últimas medidas anunciadas por el Gobierno chino sugieren un giro a esta situación que lastra el consumo y el empleo desde hace varios trimestres. Pasando de medidas técnicas de escaso impacto a políticas más comprometidas con el sector de la construcción, las autoridades chinas quieren confirmar su voluntad de alcanzar este año el objetivo de crecimiento del 5%. En un contexto geopolítico tenso, China es acusada por sus socios comerciales de competencia desleal en muchos sectores, lo que ha provocado un aumento de los aranceles aduaneros estadounidenses y una posible medida similar por parte de la UE. Pero el riesgo más importante sigue siendo la debilidad de la demanda interna, confirmada por los indicadores PMI de junio.

Mercados emergentes

Aunque en general la inflación parece estar bajo control en las economías emergentes, todas las miradas están puestas en la Reserva Federal, que se espera que no recorte tipos hasta la segunda mitad de 2024, y que a su vez determina los movimientos de los bancos centrales de las economías emergentes. Malasia, México, el Banco de la Reserva de Sudáfrica (SARB), el Banco Nacional de Polonia (NB) y el Banco Central de Turquía (TCMB) son algunos de los bancos centrales que han mantenido sus tipos intactos, mientras que el Banco Nacional Checo (CNB) y el Banco Nacional de Hungría (NBH) han reducido sus tipos 50 puntos básicos, y el Banco Central de Bulgaria (BCB) y el Banco Central de Perú (BCRP) han bajado los suyos 25 pb. El Banco Popular de China, aún constreñido por su preferencia por la estabilidad monetaria, sigue manteniendo los tipos constantes.

El 4 de junio, la India anunció los resultados de sus elecciones nacionales. La alianza democrática nacional, liderada por el Partido Bharatiya Janta (BJP), fue reelegida con una mayoría muy ajustada. Aun así, Modi obtuvo el apoyo de sus aliados en la coalición, lo que le permitió formar gobierno por tercera vez consecutiva. Tras el buen tono de las acciones indias a lo largo de varios trimestres, los inversores serán sensibles a los avances de las ambiciosas reformas económicas y de las finanzas públicas.

Renta fija

Los mercados de renta fija siguen mostrando volatilidad, tras la interrupción del descenso de la inflación en las economías desarrolladas, la ausencia de aterrizaje de la economía estadounidense y la aceleración de las economías europeas. El rendimiento del bono estadounidense a 10 años se acerca al 4.5%, mientras que los tipos a 2 años se mantienen cerca del 5%. En Europa, el rendimiento del bono alemán a 10 años ha superado el 2.6% y el 3% para el OAT. Los diferenciales de tipos entre los principales emisores de deuda pública europea se han mantenido estables, si bien observamos un movimiento desfavorable para Francia tras la rebaja de su calificación por Standard & Poor's y el anuncio de la disolución de la Asamblea Nacional tras la derrota del partido en el poder en las elecciones europeas.

Desde principios de año, con una inflación estadounidense más obstinada de lo previsto, la retórica de la Reserva Federal estadounidense se centra ahora en "no tener prisa por bajar los tipos". Esto ha sido una fuente de volatilidad en los mercados de bonos. En cambio, la inflación en Europa parece estar más o menos bajo control y el BCE ha iniciado una primera bajada de tipos. Los mercados crediticios evolucionan positivamente gracias a la resistencia de la actividad económica, la solidez de los balances y la expectativa de recortes de tipos por parte de los bancos centrales.

Equities

A pesar de una corrección temporal en abril tras la publicación de los datos de inflación en EE. UU., que muchos temían que provocaran una nueva subida de los tipos de la Fed, los mercados de renta variable han repuntado a lo largo del trimestre gracias a la publicación de unos resultados tranquilizadores en el T1.

El índice MSCI World subió un 2.6%, con resultados regionales muy dispares. El mercado estadounidense se anotó un 4.1%, superando ampliamente en dólares a Europa (+1.65%) y Japón (-2.5%). El mercado francés se vio afectado por el contexto político nacional, y cayó alrededor de un 6% en junio.

El índice S&P500 (TR) avanzó un 4.3% en el segundo trimestre y un 3.6% sólo en junio. El trimestre no empezó bien, con un retroceso en abril, ya que una serie de publicaciones de datos de inflación superiores a lo previsto tiraron al alza de los tipos de interés y avivaron la preocupación por una nueva subida de tipos por parte de la Fed. La preocupación por la inflación se disipó posteriormente y el mercado bursátil alcanzó nuevos máximos.

Observamos un cambio en la dinámica de los mercados de renta variable, con una menor concentración en los grandes valores estadounidenses (7 magníficos) y una rentabilidad superior en Europa en determinadas fases, ya que los inversores buscan sectores o regiones menos caros que Estados Unidos. Sin embargo, la incertidumbre política en Francia, seguida de la disolución de la Asamblea Nacional, provocó la retirada de los inversores no europeos. Pero la gran sorpresa debe ser el repunte del mercado chino (+5.4%) tras los anuncios del Gobierno de un mayor apoyo al sector inmobiliario y a pesar de la recogida de beneficios en junio. A pesar de la subida de los tipos a largo plazo, los títulos de crecimiento siguen superando ampliamente al segmento de valor, aunque observamos un renovado interés por los sectores con descuento y el repunte de los valores bancarios europeos en la primera parte del trimestre.
